Formation of Labour Unions
Dr. S. Lalitha

Introduction

Marx and Engels stated that throughout history there has been a struggle between the rich and the poor. They called this struggle as the “War of Classes”. They saw the struggle as a kind of war between men who own property and workers who do not own property. The message of Marx spread throughout the length and breadth of the world. The Russian Revolution had an important influence on the Indian Labour Movement after World War I. In fact, not only the Labour Movement but also the entire political movement for national independence was considerably influenced by the revolution.